The Emotional Roller Coaster of Back to Work

May 19, 2021 • 8:30am-10:30 am • Facilitated by Kelly Rudy

“Going back to work” is on the horizon, and many people are planning for that very event.

What does the evolution of the workplace look like and how can leadership teams make this all work to be successful for both the company and the people?

There is quite a bit of information available on CDC recommendations including social distancing, PPE guidelines and general cleaning and sanitation procedures. However, for the manufacturing industry this is not currently the information they need.

Manufacturers never stopped working. A good portion of their workforce had to remain physically on site to get the work done. Through this they have created, improved, and perfected their procedures when it comes to these types of things.

What they really need to know after what has happened over the past year, is how to bring their people back to work.

Please join us for this interactive event where we will present, debate and share information around the following things:

- COVID has shown us it’s hard to make remote work actually work.
- Sharing examples of how companies are trying to make remote work feel as close to work being done in person.
- The science and research behind the differences between face-to-face and online interaction.
- The idea of creating a workplace that is a “better than at home” experience.
- Can remote work actually work when it is no longer the ONLY or BEST POSSIBLE option at that moment in time.

*Please join us for the important and timely discussion! Register Today!

The Benefits Companies Need to Consider:

Gone are the days when trendy perks like free beer after noon on Fridays and bring your dog to work day are the things that attract high potential candidates and retain your current top performers. The past year has brought many things into perspective causing a shift in what employees are looking for from their employers:

- Transparent and Trustworthy Leadership
- Connection to the Company and Culture
- Strong and Enjoyable Workplace Experience
- Healthcare and Overall wellness including Physical, Mental, Financial Health
- Acknowledgement of Fear and Emphasis on Safety

Best Practices from Parinet Membership:

- Effective Communication
- Equal vs Fair
- The reality of what is needed for a company to be successful and how to portray it.
